Types of materials generated through our Tech Recycling process.

Each year, Americans throw away millions of tons of old or broken electronics, creating potentially harmful waste known as tech trash.

This doesn't have to happen.

By using Office Depot's Tech Recycling Service, you can help turn tech trash into useful raw materials.

frequently asked questions

Q. Why does Office Depot charge for the Tech Recycling Service?

A. Office Depot charges a nominal fee of $5, $10 or $15 for this service to cover the costs of the box, shipment and recycling. For other recycling options, please call your local waste management authority to find electronics-recycling options in your area.

Q. Isn't it a waste to use a new box to recycle old technology?

A. We must use well-designed and sturdy boxes to ensure safe shipping. We also want to make it convenient for you to recycle many items in one box. Finally, we use 100% post-consumer recycled cardboard and recycle all boxes again after they have been used.

Q. How will my items be recycled?

A. All items will be crushed and raw materials extracted using a shredding process. All recycling will occur in the U.S.A.

Q. Is there any risk of identity theft if I recycle products with confidential data?

A. Office Depot does not take any liability for your personal or confidential data and recommends you clean all data before recycling. However the crushing that occurs in our shredding process would make it almost impossible to recover any data.

Q. What materials come out of the process?

A. This depends on what items are put in, but the most common materials recovered are glass, plastic, copper and aluminum.

Q. What other recycling services does Office Depot offer?

A. We also provide free recycling for cell phones, rechargeable batteries and ink & toner cartridges. For more information, please see an Associate.
